Introduction

NLP has its roots in three very famous Psychotherapists. It developed in the early 70s. In those days Richard Bandler and John Grinder observed and modelled what really worked in the approaches of the founder of Gestalt Therapy, Fritz Perls, the Grande Dame of Family Therapy, Virginia Satir and the very famous Hypnotherapist, Milton Erikson. They brought together the very best of these approaches and developed easy to apply step-by-step protocols (NLP interventions) that can be highly effective and successful used in Psychotherapy, Management, Education and all areas of human communication.

Therefore, I'm very happy for the opportunity to present in this Yearbook for Psychotherapy 2022 the latest developments in NLP of very experienced Master Trainers from all over the world who have a long and rich experience in using NLP. All of the authors, except Hamid Reza Yousefi – he is Psychological Psychotherapist and Psycho-oncologist –, are “NLP Master Trainer, IN” in the International Association of NLP Institutes with 8,600+ members in 91 countries.

Nandana Nielsen from Germany presents how Virginia Satir influenced NLP. When she developed the Parts Party she also established the roots of Constellation, the positive intention of inner psychic parts and NLP Reframing.

Reza Omraie from Iran explains how to use NLP for Anxiety Disorders. He describes his own personal experiences in psychological-psychotherapeutic practice and provides a broad perspective insight into current therapeutic and methodological fields that are included in psychological-therapeutic practice.

Hamid Reza Yousefi from Germany introduces his systemic concept of Mixurative Psychotherapy where the psychotherapeutic use of NLP is a fundamental part of this approach. The aim of his resource- and solution-oriented method is to restore the psychological balance and to deal with psychological stress in a systemic way.

Habiba Zmerli Triki and Sehil Triki from Tunisia show the benefits of NLP for medical staff during the Covid pandemic 2020. They share their experience of working with the medical staff in a hospital in Tunisia.

Bruce Grimley from Great Britain applies NLP to Coaching. He presents in his 7C's model how we can be the best version of ourselves.

Alicja Gałazka from Poland explores how NLP and positive coaching can enhance the well-being of students and teachers in the COVID reality. She provides very practical exercises that can be easily used in the classroom.

Christian Hanisch from Germany presents his approach of emotion-Sync® that he developed from NLP to work effectively with hindering beliefs. His focus is on the energy that holds negative thoughts in the psychic system and the effectiveness of single sessions overexciting neural connections through emotionSync®.

Brian Cullen from Japan uses NLP for eliciting and using Magic Moments in Music, in Education, and in Life. He highly recommends the reader to enrich his life by identifying and intensifying such moments.

Karl Nielsen from Germany intensified Mindfulness through NLP. Besides the theoretical foundations, he also offers two exercises where the reader can directly experience NLP intensified Mindfulness. This is an excellent chance to intensify health, happiness, and success now.

May this edition of the Yearbook for Psychotherapy 2022 be engaging for you, the reader, and give you many creative impulses for your own practical work with people who need therapeutic help.

How Virginia Satir influenced NLP

Variations of Parts Party

Nandana Nielsen

Summary

The following article describes reinterpretation as NLP reframing. Reframing was described in the books of Bateson, Jackson, Haley and Weakland (1956) and Watzlawick u.a. (1967) in communication research and therapy. Reframing means, among other things, to decide oneself about a meaning. Thereby a new frame is set around impressions, experiences or assessments, and to consider different choices in which the meaning takes on a different significance. In psychology it is used in systemic therapy. Virginia Satir started it (Moskau, G., 1992), Erickson enriched and enchanted it with his contributions in hypnotherapy (Haven, 2005), and in NLP reframing is an important field. How do you deal with the “good intentions“ of internal parts? Parts Party and Six-step-reframing inspire many people who are open to personal growth. They can discover the wonderful opportunities and potentials behind rejected behavior that are waiting for them to be discovered and lived. Parts Party can be conducted with one person and with many people.

Count your blessings, not your problems.
Never be afraid to try something new.
And remember,
ordinary people built the ark - experts built the Titanic

1. Inspiration of a model

Virginia Satir, the brilliant woman founder of systemic family therapy, was one of the 3 models (Perls, Satir, Erickson) used for the development of NLP. Her approach of therapeutic work with families, couples and individuals, as well as her courses for psychologists, social workers and other experts in the therapeutic field, were a great source of inspiration and insight for Bandler and Grinder (1975/1976). She had been working with families since the 1950s, which was completely against the therapeutic tradition, and in 1959 offered family therapy courses at the Mental Research Institute (MRI), in California, USA. MRI is one of the founding institutions of short-term and family therapy. It has been a leader for ideas in the field of interactional/systemic studies, psychotherapy, and family therapy. Throughout her life, she had a very alert mind, animated by helping families to become functional families. A "functional family" is the Systemic Family Therapy term for a family where each family member can communicate his or her needs, is taken seriously, and where freedom is a great value in the family.

Bandler recorded Satir's seminars between 1972 and 1974. At the beginning, he was 22 years old, Virginia Satir 56 years old and an experienced family therapist:

"As always, Bandler proved exceptionally talented at learning other people's behaviour patterns quickly and effectively. He used a strategy he had used earlier in the musical field. When he wanted to learn the style of a musician he admired, he would listen to their recordings until he managed to identify with them to such an extent that he could imitate them reasonably accurately." (Walker, 1996 - translated from German)

When he recorded her workshop, accompanied by his talent for intuitively understanding Virginia's practice, he focused inwardly, and began to imitate her unconsciously. This way the following incident occurred:

"Throughout the seminar he (Bandler) was isolated in his recording room; there was only one microphone contact with the seminar room. He had a pair of two-channel headphones and was tuning the recording in one ear while listening to cassettes of Pink Floyd in the other. Last week Virginia had staged a counselling session and asked the participants what they would now do with it, drawing on the material she had taught them. Then participants seemed stuck. Richard stormed into the seminar room and successfully dealt with the problem. And Virginia said: "That's exactly right." Richard found himself in the strange position of knowing more about Virginia's patterns than any of the participants, without having consciously tried to learn them." (O'Connor, Seymour; 14th ed. 2004/1992- translated from German)

John Grinder's gift of modelling some of Virginia Satir's patterns from this natural talent of Richard Bandler, allowed him to make them explicit and thus captured parts of Virginia Satir's approach.

In the 1970s Richard Bandler, John Grinder and Virginia Satir had a very productive time. In the book "Structure of Magic I", published in 1975, Bandler and Grinder made a dedication to Virginia Satir, who gave them her intuitions about people and they passed on this view in this book. In the following book "Structure of Magic II" published in 1976, Virginia Satir was also the godmother for topics such as: Incongruities and Meta-Techniques, Family Therapy and other motifs. (Bandler, Grinder 2nd ed. 1984/1980) (Bandler, Grinder; 2nd ed. 1984/1982)

Bandler, Grinder and Satir learned from and with each other, were enthusiastic, and discovered many things on their common path. They supported people on their paths of consciousness, the development of their communication, and attention for their sense of self-esteem.

In 1976 the 3 authors: Virginia Satir, Richard Bandler and John Grinder published: "Talking with Families. Conversational Patterns and Therapeutic Change." (Satir, Bandler, Grinder; 2nd ed. 1983/1978). Congruent communication, ideas for conflict resolution and feelings and caring within the family were impulses that were central to family therapy.

2. Resources from Virginia Satir

Satir conveyed her inner attitude towards people in her videos. In her sessions, she remains present, is very kinaesthetic, has a warm language and a life-affirming attitude. She holds one of the client's hands with her right hand and often invites the left hand to join it. People melt away. You can't say that they are only listening. They are drawn to the strength and the aura of Virginia. They smile. This brings the whole family into a state of relaxation. When Satir works, they are all one system. (Video: Virginia Satir: "The Essence of Change", 5.10.2021).

Satir was convinced that everyone can grow. That people are full of fear when changes arise and when they do not know how to reposition themselves. Satir had a Tao (Mitchell, 2006) orientated mind-set, like C.G. Jung (Alt, 1983), Alan Watts (Watts, et al. 1975), and Milton Erickson. This is the mind-set of the Eastern teachings of the Tao. She did not advocate the old form of psychotherapy where the therapist was the healer and the patient was the sick person. For her, both the therapist and the client were wounded healers. She had recognised that people want to develop and give strength to their souls. This woundedness, which accompanies us throughout our lives, consists of crises that do not need solutions. They heal through a change of meaning, inner wisdom and facing one's thoughts. This is how the steps for change begin. It needs a life-affirming therapist and courageous clients. (Laura S. Dodson in: Moscow/Mueller; 1992)

3. Satir's philosophy

What is her stability in her work? Among other things, she has an idea. She knows that people have learned a lot in their lives from their families. The "coping strategies" from families are no longer modern. Relationships, families, the dreams of young people require new "coping strategies". Satir has an alert eye. Man is part of history. When he enters into a relationship after 20 or 30 years, the mechanisms for shaping this relationship cannot already have been learned. Then one learns new. What needs to be supported for a lifetime? It's all about self-esteem, communication, the rules of the family, the whole system. Families often have destructive patterns of interaction that have to be developed more positively by the next generation. Virginia Satir was convinced that the learned patterns of interaction can be unlearned and that people strive to increase their self-esteem and they can develop productive patterns in their own family:

"When a human being lives more humanly: it is a person who understands, values and develops his body, finds it beautiful and useful; a person who is real and honest with himself, about himself and others; a person who is willing to take risks, to be creative, to be competent, to change when the situation demands it, to find ways to accommodate new and different things, to keep the part of the old that is useful after all and to discard the part that is not."

(Satir, Virginia: 13th ed., 1998/1975 – translated from German)

In order to learn new coping strategies, old role models have to fall. To realise that you were a child when you internalised your family's belief systems is of essential relevancy. It is important to check what percentage of that is still true today. When a person becomes a shaman, he learns from another shaman all the wonderful secrets that shamans have been learning for ages. The ability to adapt to our permanently changing times is today a highly needed outstanding quality. Virginia Satir understood this Zeitgeist. She had been involved in working with families since the 1950s, always trying to learn things to improve her help. At the beginning of the 70s, she started with family sculpture. She taught the families who came to her that they should not work on their actual family, but that they should get to know their own family of origin. To realise that their parents were not demigods, but simply parents - who erred, who loved, who were euphoric, and desperate. (Satir et al.; 1995)

4. Re-interpretation (Reframing)

Satir had developed a model with the "Parts Party" that supports identification, transformation and integration of a person's inner parts and resources. The reframing used in Parts Party was the basis for the 6-Step-Reframing in NLP: identify the problem, establish communication, explore the positive intention, activate the creative part, ecology check, and taking responsibility. Using the following link you can find the NLP cards with detailed instruction of the required steps of the 6-Step-Reframing technique. In the English power point it is in Card 30: "Six-Step Reframing" on slide 32: <https://www.nlp-institutes.net/sources/material/nlp-practitioner-cards-english-and-espanol>

Both models deal with the aspects of the unconscious parts, the positive intentions, and a behaviour that should be changed. This perspective is known as reframing - the inner experience gets a new meaning: the unconscious parts and the positive intention lead to a perception of resource orientation, which leads to a way for solution or growth. This reframing brings hope: I can do something that I recognise and approve of by focusing on my positive impulses.

What are the inner parts? In NLP, parts are personality parts that lead their own life and yet are connected to other parts of the system, sometimes good, sometimes bad. Parts have a task in the system and this task always has a positive intention. Parts are treated as persons in NLP. The part has its own will that it can use. The more the inner parts know each other, the more comfortable the person feels with the parts living under the skin.

What is the “positive intention”? The unconscious personality parts have a positive intention, and they have a positive function. In reframing, this working hypothesis, of positive intention, is introduced as a fact. In NLP, positive intention is often used in change techniques. Here one does not go into the negative aspects of the behaviour, but asks: “What is the positive intention of this part?”

For positive intention, you separate the behaviour from the identity of the person. Behaviour is about rules and norms and sanctions, positive and negative. Behaviour is about setting transparent boundaries and maintaining conditions that protect a social community.

At the identity level the core of the human being or soul is dignity, respect, mindfulness, gratitude, wisdom, and other values. They are not conditional, but a matter of decency and a part of democracy. A person should consider another person as “good”.

“Positive intention”, the attitude that people are good, is a basic attitude and also a belief system, in both NLP and in the Parts Party of Virginia Satir. This has more of a pragmatic character. Assume that people are all right, even if their behaviour is unusual. This attitude means that one increasingly has a relaxed communication with one’s fellow human beings and strives to keep one’s focus on goals, energies and constructive exchange. This is good for most people and brings them closer to “positive intentions”.

5. All parts form a unity

In our encounters with other people, we tend to do as if, what these people express is their complete person. We have no awareness of the fact, that people in different contexts always express only a part of their whole being. We have the tendency to think that one part is the whole.

Even when dealing with ourselves, we try to appear as a whole. This effort leads us to reject, deny or ignore certain parts of ourselves. We prefer to pay attention only to the parts we find pleasant. We try to live according to our values and hide from ourselves the parts that do not fit our values. We are not aware that these parts, many of our idiosyncrasies, can be transformed in many ways and have much to contribute to the fullness of our lives and that their integration makes our lives easier and more complete.

It is similar with the parts as it is with the weather. The weather doesn't care if we like it. We won't be able to change the weather, but we can change our reaction to it. Or, as Karl Valentin says: "I am happy when it rains, because when I am not happy, it rains too."

6. All parts have resources

All our parts are resources and feed our desire to grow. Unfortunately, most of us label our different parts into two categories: the good and the bad. Parts that we reject and suppress we do not recognise in their potential and, more importantly, these parts cannot be hidden. The more we distance ourselves from them, the greater the "noise" they make to escape their predicament. As long as we belittle, hide, reject or deny parts of ourselves, we cannot fully and freely develop and use the energy, the potentials that are contained in them. We spend a lot of energy keeping rejected parts from showing themselves to the world instead of using that energy to explore and express the resource, the positive intention of that part.

We organise our inner parts to fit the image we want of ourselves, but not necessarily our inner wisdom. It is possible to change any part of ourselves at any time. This also applies to the parts we find unpleasant.

Our parts themselves strive for a harmonious wholeness that allows diversity, growth and wisdom. If we open ourselves to this process, exploring our parts rather than judging them, we can steer the direction of this process and enjoy the fullness of our possibilities in dealing with the world.

What prevents us from being interested in all our parts are our beliefs and the rules we have constructed from our life experiences. These rules of life determine how we relate to others, who we should be and who we should not be. They serve the positive intention of strengthening and stabilising our self-esteem. If, for example, we forbid ourselves to be angry, then this prohibition follows the idea that we ensure our survival while suppressing our anger. A goal that is positive in itself often leads to negative consequences.

In most cases, we have learned these rules and beliefs in childhood and from them we have drawn the conclusion of how to behave in order to be lovable. When we then start to hide parts that contradict our rules of life, we disconnect from our inner wisdom and often experience feelings of loneliness and emptiness. Or we live our anger and create the legitimacy that we are so authentic. This legitimisation structure also prevents us from finding the potential of this aspect, from transforming this part so that we can live its potential.

Only when we recognise all parts as belonging to us, only then can we become connected to our potential and thus have an excellent possibility to support our growth. We take an interest in all parts and develop a great awareness of our inner wealth.

7. Acknowledge parts

By accepting parts that we have previously perceived in a distorted way as they actually are, we can increasingly develop the wholeness of our being. In doing so, we open ourselves to the present and accept what is. Then the fear or panic that accompanies us when we ignore, distort or deny parts disappears and we reduce the stress that we have imposed on ourselves through this effort. Acknowledging all our parts supports us to live in the present reality and to deal with our rules and our inner wisdom. In doing so, we transcend our self-imposed limitations, expand our choices and increasingly live the unfolding of our potential. We become more and more like our true being!

In the recognition of rejected parts lies the first step towards change. Virginia Satir developed the "Parts Party" for this work, which leads to taking a holistic perspective in relation to all parts. This perspective helps to recognise that our self is a wholeness and that each part indispensably belongs to and helps to shape this wholeness. She herself states:

"If we only accept the "good", "clean" and "right" parts of ourselves, this usually leads to us feeling dull, uninteresting and empty. We suppress a lot of potential energy. This distracts from our overall being, as each part is important to the whole and contributes to it being more powerful overall. Despite their specific function, each part is a hologram of our being. The parts are like the individual cells of our body, which contain both the specific message for their own special function and the entire genetic programme. Each of our parts contains the totality of our being. Conversely, this wholeness can also characterise all our parts once we integrate them." (Virginia Satir et al.; 1995/1991 – translated from German edition)

8. Variations of the Parts Party Process

The aim of the Parts Party is to transform the relationship between the parts into a mutual cooperation.

The essential basic assumptions of Virginia Satir, in her work on the integration of multiple parts of a person, can be described in 3 statements:

- The different parts of our personality are interconnected and interdependent. They form a unity.
- All parts have resources.
- Some parts we recognise and accept, some parts we reject, ignore or deny and some parts we are not aware of because they are asleep. It is not enough to awaken these parts, they need to be nurtured and actively used.

The parts model of NLP has its roots in the "Parts Party" from Virginia Satir. The concept of parts is used to explain the often-contradictory impulses we have for certain actions. One part of us desires to go forward while another wants to go back. NLP deals with such conflicts through techniques such as reframing, parts integration, and the "Parts Party". In the "Parts Party" in NLP, the central aim is to create congruence or rapport with oneself, to appreciate the parts and to access the useful aspect of each part. When all the parts of a person cooperate with each other, there are no obstacles to acting and striving for outcomes that the person desires. There is a great freedom of choice, which in NLP means having the ability to respond to a situation with more than one emotion or behaviour.

The "Parts Party" has undergone changes again and again. This format inspires many trainers to develop it further for groups and individuals. Satir described it first in 1978 in her book "Your many faces", where she wrote about her personal parts in a theatrical performance.

On the website of the International Association of NLP Institutes (IN): www.NLP-Institutes.net we describe step by step in the resource area the original "Parts Party" from Virginia Satir, the NLP version from Robert McDonald, the application from Systemische Strukturausstellung (SySt) and how it can be used in the Social Panorama approach of Dr. Lucas Derks. The version of SySt is how it can be used in Constellation and the approach of Dr. Lucas Derks allows to do constellation in the imaginary inner mental space very similar to the Constellation approach just without representatives and all inside the mind with NLP submodalities work. www.nlp-institutes.net/sources/material/parts-party-from-virginia-satir-english-version

Conclusions

Bandler, Grinder and Satir have the conviction that people want to evolve. Reframing is offered as a method for dealing with hurts, changes, the joys and sorrows that life offers, to give new meaning to the inner experience and to open up to inner growth and potential.

In reframing we are dealing with the hindering or limiting beliefs of a person. Beliefs are about rules, norms, and sanctions. They are about conditions, about setting transparent boundaries, and protecting a social community. Identity is about values. Dignity, mindfulness and respect are not conditional – these values have to be filled with meaning. Parts that are not integrated consume much more of our energy. There is great wisdom in accepting all the parts and following this process of our development. The unconscious parts and the positive intention, lead to a perception of resource orientation and thus a path is taken to resolution and growth. This is an offer to live more humanly.
